

From the above graphs, the threshold where the input size is considered small is 50. This is the point where there is no noticeable difference between the performance of the Bubble sort algorithm and the quicksort algorithm. When the input size is greater than 50, the time taken by bubble sort increases significantly compared to quicksort, especially with extremely high input sizes as shown in the second graph.